The Bankrupt's Lament.

A banker sat in his easy chair,
His pale, pale face and sunken air
Betrayed that he was ill at ease,
And filled all the country round with fears.
He had burned the midnight oil,
And plundering days was his toil,
And gambling days his game.

He had lost his money at cards and at horse
It thrilled my heart to the very core,
As my eye I glanced beside the door
His last hour of wealth had come.
"My poor friend I have no wish to cry;
They are empty besides that do not [illegible]
And now that you've lost your money and [illegible]
It's not for gamin from the orphan's door;
Take courage all! how [illegible]
I would not stay the flight of time,
Or [illegible] the sweets of any crime,
And [illegible] my friend.

Now [illegible] the injured wound of fame,
I have no thought of the land of woe,
Or the future fruit of any vice.

I care no more for the heat and heat,
Or the shortest line of any book.
Fourpot and rabbit are free from harm,
And [illegible] no more.
Oh! 'Tis the overwhelmin sense that tires.
A time deep rolled upon the floor;
'Twas [illegible] and [illegible]
The darkest [illegible] may pass me by,
It's not for them that I wear and sigh.

But give! Oh, give! was his wailing cry,
Oh, give one bottle of whisker dye.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

—In purchasing a horse the buyer should see that the seller is not too deep for him.

—Save a Pound cable, "I like a girl behind me that will tell me so sometimes," before she goes [illegible].

—Why are some men meaner than bad pennies? Because the latter will finally settle, but some men won't.

—A Jordan proverb says, "The mane are a pair of horses to the hippahs a and the woman look sins."

—Farmer's boots are the rules, you can't tell how old a man is by them by the number of holes they have on.

—"Why did Adam bite the apple?" said a school-master to a scholar. "Because he had no knife," said the [illegible].

—What is the worst thing about cricket? asked the Sunday school superintendent. And the new boy said, "Their scarcity."

—A little girl hearing it remarked that all people had once been children, either [illegible] was that right?

—"Well, said a bonnie lassie, "you're the first young man I ever met who likes them as well: for my part, I reckon me as fat as the fastest a girl saw."

—"Indeed sure this was ordered, after many performances, by my some earned moral, brought it back, showing the marks of his teeth on the top, and indignantly saying that it was good to eat.

—Some crusty, rusty, fusty, musty dusty, gusty command of a man gave the following toast at a celebration: "Our fire engines—may they be like our old maids never rusted, but never wasted!"

—A little boy in a suburban school, who had been listening to a lesson on hedges and ditches, was asked by the teacher, "What is an animal in a goose?" "A goose, he replied, confidently, "is a sort of fool."

—"It is true, Harry, that you have broken off with Hattie, my daughter?" "Alas! yes, I was forced to, although she was a charming woman." "Why?" "Incompatibility of temperament. She does not suit my furniture."

—Sometimes a little boy in the infant class of Sunday school, was asked by the teacher whether he had learned any [illegible] "Yes, ma'am," "Yes, ma'am," he, "What have you learned?" "Never to trump your partner's trick," was his [illegible]

—The committee on political economy of the Lunatic Club "beat to say dat de person who can't go to a storm and keep his powder dry ought to be put in de lunatic" his general system, had better be done up in a soft way and every other day, and [illegible] him." The committee accepted as the sentiment of the club.

—A minister was once examining a class on the subject of Divine Providence in the house of Cornelius. He asked the question, "What is Providence?" and was answered by one of Cornelius's boys: "Providence is Cornelius's horse" and he paused for a reply. He got one, but quite as unsatisfactory as the first, which was: "Providence is Cornelius's cow." "I think, sir," said she, "of Peter was a mannerly man, he mended his manners when he ate pie."

—He opened the door cautiously, and picking his head in a suspicious sort of way, as if afraid to believe, he [illegible] quired: "Is this the editorial sinkum?" "Yes, what, my friend?" "Is this the editorial sinkum?" "Yes, I mean Rowell's office." "Then I'll see what a sickness was like, that's all. Looks like our parson, only ever. Good day."

—The preacher was ill, and the children's class was left in charge of [illegible] Mrs. Jones, who said [illegible] "Now, children, I'm going to [illegible] and I want you to be very quiet." So they promised [illegible] and

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1880.

The rioter is again reviled that Mr. Alexander Mackenzie notoriously thinks of succeeding the constituency of Lennox and Addington, "the mockingman's candidate," as he styled in his speech at Bath.

Notwithstanding the great proportions of Tay-river, the Australian expresses an unbounded confidence in the superiority and the bowling is rejoiced in on his favor.

The Princess Louise is announced to sail for London on the 11th of November, judging from the lateness of the season when the Princess generally chooses for crossing, it is apparent that she enjoys a very slight fear of the terrors and inconveniences of a winter voyage across the Atlantic.

It is generally believed in well-informed circles that a meeting of the Dominion Parliament will be summoned early in November to ratify the Premier's bargain for the construction of the Pacific railway. An adjournment will take place of sufficient length to the canal time of meeting, thus avoiding the expense of an extra session.

The Tennessean's engineers have reported to the east of constructing the Memphis and Ottawa railway, placing the estimate at nine millions. The friends of the enterprise appear to be confident that the railway will be built in the near future. The route is unique in this country, and is destined in the success of the enterprise to form many granted liberal encouragement.

Mr. Wyatt and family arrived in London from Montreal last Tuesday, and after a thorough test it is said that it is destined to entirely supersede the whole system of sewerage. The invention is on the form of a torpedo, and is said to be capable of piercing the strongest vessel now afloat, and also all the newly projected vessels, on the new line of the vessels are practically useless when assailed by this dread machine. The torpedo is receiving the attention of the British admiralty.

Very near Lake Nam is menacing the whole of Europe. A despatch announces that the United States government has despatched a steamer to Constantinople to strengthen the hands of the minister in his demands for the punishment of the assassins of Dr. Pamson, U.S. missionary. The American eagle is apparently unaffected by the push his head into the troublous kettle of European politics; the dangerous pastime, however, and there be no scarcity in the arena, the valiant bird is sure to get his toes severely scorched.

The annual statement of the business transacted by the post office savings department has been issued, and a comparison with previous years indicates that the season of prosperity has set in, and that its influence is being felt among the laboring classes. Both the number and amount of deposits have greatly increased during the past year, and as these come principally represent the savings of the working classes, it must be regarded as satisfactory evidence that the improvement in trade is already benefitting our laboring people. There is no doubt of a revival in trade, and with a bountiful harvest, and a prospect of fair prices for all kinds of agricultural products, there is prospect for the coming year is very favorable.

The first contest in the Presidential campaign has taken place in the state of Maine, resulting in a donations defeat of the Republican party. The government always select the most favorable states for their first elections, with a view of influencing those that follow, but in this instance the party leaders have entirely miscalculated the temper of the country, and there is consternation in the ranks of the government officials and office holders throughout the republic. The democrats, on the other hand, are elated at the prospect of almost certain victory, and are excited to renewed exertions to secure the entire defeat of their candidates double sure. Maine was generally admitted by both parties to be a republican state, and the government can even allowed a large majority of 40,000 for its candidate. The result would therefore indicate a determination on the part of the people to try a change. If the polling in this state is any criterion of the feeling throughout the north, the success of the Democrats in the general elections is a foregone conclusion.

The Nihilists of Russia are relentless in their desire to dispose of the reigning family, and no matter in what form, or what the circumstances, no opposition is allowed to pass that affords the slightest chance of accomplishing their purpose. A despatch from England announces the discovery of a diabolical plot near London, to blow up a whole express train, with its hundreds of passengers, merely to compass the death of one man—the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia—and his staff, who were supposed to be on board. The fiends had placed about half-a-hundred of the infernal machines on the line, and succeeded in filling the rails by a rubber tube filled with gunpowder and other explosives. The plot would undoubtedly have been only too successful but for the merciful interposition of Providence, the point at which the wheels of the car passed over the rails of the tubes, fortunately not having continued any rope. The plot was discovered by a detective after the train had passed, and the news of its discovery by a sheriff of Kansas in every part of the land. No efforts will be spared to discover the fiends who plotted the destruction of the train.

that he swore to never thereafter be beat the head up, he died at last in agony.

And Eleanor Rendale's answer, written with almost all her tremendous freedom of pen, was likely rendered her. He even saw in fancy the writing, where he found her letter awaiting.

The scrawl must have been very slight; and that he should not even have mentioned it to her enough as it was necessary to comment for his shortness and the imperfections of the writing.

"There," said Stefano Rena, "Did I not tell you so." If you want a downright answer, you must not be downright. Then there's nothing like plain dealing. And now, my child, I suppose your heart is set at rest."

But her heart was set at rest. Once again she pressed in the kissed expression of her soul's safety, once again, he, she formally to united Tonio Metteli.

And yet, even now, Eleanor Rendale had not told her love he came by his accident.

CHAPTER XI.

"WHERE IS HE?"

We have seen how the winter months were spent by Leonard Beachcomby; how, using it almost like among the ruins of Old Court, he looked manfully through his misfortune to desires, and became, in very act and fact his brother's successor. For Winifred stayed the same words by more monotonously, from the whole, more happily. The woman's adaptability overshadowed, were here. She found her self at rest, limited for a while upon a which whence she could look back upon the trouble that we have, and forward to the footsteps of one whom we
